

Regional focus North-east England

Rubber gloves form next fair trade

News analysis
The UK's ethical products and services market is valued at £12bn, writes Chris Tignor

Even before the outbreak of the new coronavirus, the UK's ethical products and services market was valued at £12bn, according to a report by the Ethical Consumer Group. The report, published in London, says that the market is expected to reach £15bn by 2025. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year.

market for fair trade and ethical products and services valued at £12bn, the report says. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year.

market for fair trade and ethical products and services valued at £12bn, the report says. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year.

But ethical consumers opt for quality and principle

market for fair trade and ethical products and services valued at £12bn, the report says. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year.

market for fair trade and ethical products and services valued at £12bn, the report says. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year. The report also notes that the market is growing at a rate of 10% per year.

